Tid-Bits

By UNO HOO

Finances these days are gettin' tuff. Little Jimmy cums in Saturday nite an' sez, have you got a job I kin do to make a nickle so I kin go to the show. I sez, kind of late in the day to try to make a nickle ain't it? Jimmy sez well I could sweep the floor er sumpin, ignoring my question. How kin ya turn a guy like that down, I liked his persaverance. So I sez, go dump the waste basket. OK and off he goes. Fifteen minutes later back cums Jimmy with his brother, Joe, er sumpin. Joe hain't got enuf money either, he just lacks a penny. So gullible me, I gives him a penny. So then Jimmy sez to Joe, you got more pieces of candy 'n I got. So I sez, well where's my piece'a candy.? They both turns around 'n sez we'll give you sum, and both proceed to dig me out a piece of candy. Then out the door they go happy as could be, me too. I sorta enjoyed their big deal.

About 10 o'clock Tuesday night we thought someone had dropped an atomic bomb on Main St. We rushed out and saw Mac across at the Temple just coming out to investigate. He looked around a bit and found one of his youthful customers had a long split on his bicycle tire. Who would think a blown out bicycle tire could make all that noise?

That's a feller here in town what helps to run a restaurant, and just tryin' to be good to his wife, he sez, I'll let you sleep a couple 'a hours this mornin', dear. So she cuddles down under the covers and shuts her eyes real tight to keep out the light and tries to get real hard of hearin'. Then the dutiful father begins to get himself dressed and begins callin' his son to get up fer school. This goes on fer half an hour, and then all is quiet. Junior starts fer school, Papa starts for work, and Mama snuggles down for another forty winks, and jest dozes off when "bang", open comes the front door, and Papa yells, Mama when do you want me to wake you up!

I'll betcha papa's runnin' yet. Then to top it off he tells his cronies he let Mama sleep a coupla hours this mornin' Guess they all made up last time we say tho.

We noticed in last week's Rotary Club bulletin an article by Richard Malpass concerning the emptyness of several buildings in the business district, with more to come, and suggests there are openings for businesses in the service line. Quite possibly Dick is right. Then, too, you hear the hue and cry from the school kids and adults that "What we need is a new factory here in town." Is this what East Jordan needs? If you think it is, are you willing to invest $500 or more in a building to house same, along with other investors, that some industry may buy it back on long terms and small interest. Apparently that is the only way to attract industry now. Boyne City just did it. Central Lake did it. Ellsworth did it. Mancelona did it. After all is said and done, if you want MORE industry YOU have to BUY it, although more or less indirectly. Seemingly there is no other way.

AN APPRECIATION

I wish to take this means to thank my many friends and neighbors for calling on me and for the many flowers and gifts, cards and letters. Also my thanks to the East Jordan Masonic Lodge and Jassamine Rebekah Lodge for their remembrances while I was in the Charlevoix and Munson Hospitals.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Freese Celebrate 70th Anniversary

Saturday, Nov. 22, marked the 70th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Freese of East Jordan. The event is a record, perhaps for the state of Michigan, and Mr. and Mrs. Freese were honored by neighbors and friends.

A large cake, made by Mrs. Eileen Brennan and Mrs. Joan Dennis, highlighted the occasion. Open House was held at Grandvue Convalescent Hospital where the couple live and friends called during the afternoon and evening.

Both in good health, Mrs. Freese is 88 years and Mr. Freese is 90. They were married in Little Traverse, a community now called Good Hart, near Petoskey, in 1882. After their marriage they moved to East Jordan where they have lived the past 70 years.

NATURE PLAYED TRICK ON DOE

Nature played tricks on one unfortunate doe shot during first day of deer season, the conservation department reports.

Morris Norton, Hersey, brought down the 120-pound doe while hunting west of Big Stone Lake, Osceola county.

But Norton could hardly be prosecuted for shooting this doe; the animal was carrying a five-point antler rack when shot. Game men say this happens occasionally when sex glands are damaged during an animal's growth.

South Arm Farm Bureau Met With Mrs. Delbert Ingalls

The November meeting of the South Arm Farm Bureau was held at the Delbert Ingalls home, with thirteen members and four guests present.

Our county rpresentative, Warren Frank, reported that the State Farm Bureau had passed a resolution stating that all dues for 1953 must be in by January 15th, or the Blue Cross insurance will be canceled.

Very interesting reports were given by the ladies who attendd the State Convention of Farm Bureau Women at M. S. C., namely, Mrs. Edward Kamradt, Mrs. J. M. Ingalls, Mrs. Howard Donaldson and Mrs. T. Floyd French. They all agreed that the meeting was very worthwhile and hoped that more from our group would attend next year.

We will soon be starting a new year and we are hoping to see more of our members in regular attendance. One member, who attended Tuesday night, was heard to remark that he never enjoyed a Farm Bureau meeting as much as that one. Come on, members, we need you and you need us!

Catholic Churches Sponsor Clothing Drive This Week

Catholic churches in the 29 county Diocese of Grand Rapids are againg sponsoring a Thanksgiving Clothing Collection.

Under the auspices of the War Relief Services of the National Catholic Welfare Council, this drive is scheduled to get under way during Thanksgiving week, November 23 to 30.

Each parish has designated a collection depot and anyone with wearable, warm clothing to donate may drop it off at the church or depot nearest them or they may call the church and ask for pick-up service.

All clothing collected will be carefully boxed to be sent to the poorly clad victims of war in Korea, the Far East and Europe. Millions of men, women and children of different races and creeds are being clothed each year through the generosity of Americans who contribute to this Thanksgiving Clothing Collection.

Thirty "Red Devils" Awarded Letters at Football Banquet

THORNY PROBLEM

Nicholas V. Olds, assistant attorney general assigned to the conservation department, has filed an answer and crossbill in the thorny problem of Lake Ann, Presque Isle county.

The court case was started recently to solve the question of whether or not fishermen have rightful access to the lake.

Henry M. Lucy, owner of property surrounding the lake, says they do not. Attorney Olds says a small stream outlet is navigable public water and therefore does provide fishermen access to the lake.

The question is not scheduled for a court hearing for several weeks.

Thirty "Red Devil" football players were awarded their letters at the Annual Football Banquet held at the High School Gymnasium Tuesday of this week.

Heading the list of letterwinners released by Coaches Gayle Saxton and John Downing were eleven seniors. They were: Captain, James Shepard, all Northwest Michigan guard, Sam Milstein, Richard Freeman, Leon Bartlett, Gordon Danforth, William Rogers, Mike Davis, Jerry Evans, Warren Frank, Lawrence Chanda and Floyd Detloff.

Other letterwinners by classes were: Juniors — Keith Evans, Ronald Wilson, James Petrie, Ray Gee, Steve Hayden, J. M. Ingalls, James Weisler, James Blaha and Peter Nemecek; Sophomores — Robert Danforth, Robert Russell, Robert Darbee, Robert Romback, Martin Rebec, James Sherman, Jack Zoulek, Floyd Cutler and Allen Sommerville; and a lone freshman — Richard Johnson.

Those receiving honorable mention were: Everett Ingalls, Everett Beishlag, Robert Snyder, Jerry Brennan, Frank Rusnell, Richard Streeter, Dennis Wilson, Ralph Wycoff, Fred DeHaven, John Brock, Gary Bartlett, Joseph Smith, Richard Barnett, Jerry Sweet, Thomas Sheridan and Jerry O'Brien.

Student managers for this year's team were Cal Darbee and Larry Woodcock, both eighth graders.

The total of thirty letterwinners is believed to be the largest number of football awards ever presented at one time at East Jordan High School.

Electric Service Interruptions Caused by Hunters in This Area

Shots from guns of hunters, apparently intentionally, cut off Consumers Power Company's electric service in several communities in the Company's Northwest Division. Division Manager, Bob D. Hilty, said there were several interruptions Saturday afternoon, Nov. 22, when something, apparently a bullet, from a deer hunter's rifle severed a high voltage transmission line one-half mile east of Mio, about 30 miles east of Grayling. Mr. Hilty said several shots rang out just before the line parted. He said that several marks, apparently caused by bullets, were found on a conductor near the break in the lines.

Service interruptions were kept fairly brief through rerouting of the power supply. Some areas were without power for a few minutes and others nearly an hour. Line crews completed repair of the line some hours later.

Mr. Hilty said that the line was the third transmission line in the Company's area to be damaged by bullets in this year's deer season.

E. J. H. S. Basketball Five Open Season at Alpena Tuesday Evening, Dec. 2nd

East Jordan High School will open its 1952-53 basketball season at Alpena, Tuesday evening, Dec. 2nd, when they meet the Class B Alpena Catholic Central quintet, one of the outstanding Class B aggregations in the State last winter.

The "Red Devils" will entertain the Pellston "Hornets" here, Friday, night, Dec. 5th, at the local high school gym in the conference opener for both schools.

The probable starting lineup for Tuesday's opener will find Warren Frank and Richard Freeman at the forward posts, Steve Hayden at center, and James Shepard and Keith Evans at the guard slots. Only Evans and Shepard were regulars last winter, and although five other letterwinners are on hand, this year's aggregation will be short on experience. Gaylord, with eleven lettermen back, along with the always potential Charlevoix quintet are favorites to battle it out for this year's Northern Michigan Class C Conference crown.

Herald Sponsoring 'Best Hunting Story' Contest

The Herald is sponsoring a contest of the most unusual and interesting hunting experiences. It need not have taken place this year. Literary excellence is immaterial.

Prizes of $5, $3 and $2 dollars will be awarded to the hunters who write the three best experiences to the Herald Office within the next five weeks. A committee of interested persons consisting of three in number will act as judges of the letters to be printed each week up to and including Jan. 1, 1953.

The prize money will be deposited at the State Bank of East Jordan for the lucky hunters.

Come on fellows, let's have some lively letters, and your experience for next week's Herald. You have five weeks to go. There must really be some good stories, why not let us have them?

Citizens of Tomorrow

Am. Legion Auxiliary Urges Members Cooperation

The American Legion Auxiliary Unit 227 held a semi-social meeting at the Legion Home Tuesday, Nov. 18. The attendance was very small. All the officers and active members have been working very hard to carry on the work required of the Auxiliary but more support from all the membership must be had if we are to do a good job. So if you have not been attending meetings try and get out if it is possible. Everyone realizes that with so many members working especially during the summer, it is hard but now that some of the work is slacking off let's see if we can't bring up the membership attendance and show the officers all the members of the Unit are behind them.

Several fine committee reports were given. Thora Kotowich, chairman, said the mixed chorus has postponed the meeting until after the first of the year. Florence Stucker, Jr. Activities chairman, informed us that her Juniors are ready and anxious to get started on the toy repair project for the Community Christmas program, but they need more toys to work on. The Jr. Auxiliary hold their meetings every second and fourth Saturday of the month at the Legion Home. Peggy Thomas, Community Service Chairman, will soon have several dolls that will have to be dressed for the Christmas boxes so if anyone would care to dress a doll contact her and she will appreciate it.

November being membership month in the Auxiliary, Hilda Bathke, membership chairman, was hostess of the evening. For entertainmnt Hilda called on Mary Lou Breakey to assist her with a little surprise stunt. Mary Lou was asked to remove her coat and when she did she was weaing a sign across her chest reading Membership Chairman, and had an apron tied about her waist made of dollar bills representing dues collected by her for Hilda's team, so now that Mary Lou has taken over one team the competition should be keen. She is working against Lillian Bennett, captain of the other team, and also her sister. There has been an official announcement. as to which team is ahead but to date we have 77 members. We still have a lot to go if we are to fill our quota this year. If you are a member and have not paid your current dues as yet or if you are eligible and wish to join the Auxiliary be sure and contact one of the captains. The membership contest will last through November. Following the meeting a nice lunch of potato salad, rolls, cake, doughnuts and coffee was served by the hostess. Everyone had a fine time. Next Auxiliary meeting to be Tuesday, Dec. 9, at the Legion Home at 8 o'clock. Be sure and attend as this is a very important meeting.

Miss that deer? Perk up, you'll find good hunting here!

First Grade — Mrs. Stokes

Billy Darbee, Laura Grauel and Velma Sweet celebrated their birthdays by bringing birthday cake or cupcakes for all of us.

We have been learning about the first Thanksgiving. We drew pictures about it, too.

We are enjoying our milk each morning and are glad the Community Chest people are seeing that we have it.

Peggy Nelson celebrated her sixth birthday by bringing a birthday cake complete with candles. Her little sister came to school on Peggy's birthday. Peggy said the nicest thing about her birthday was having her Daddy home from Korea.

We were glad to have Phyllis Sineway enter our room on Tuesday.

Second Grade — Agnes Johnston

We are making covers for our new spelling booklets. We chose to make a November design for our covers.

We are preparing Thanksgiving songs for our assembly Wednesday afernoon. We like to sing the "Thankful" song best. This song is in our new music books.

Tuesday we enjoyed the movie "The King of Kings". This was a story about wheat. It told how important it was to start out each day with a good breakfast.

Wednesday we went in the gymnasium to see the Book Fair Exhibit. Miss Chamberlin, the storyteller from Petoskey, told us the story, "When the Mississippi Went Wild". This was a very interesting legend about an alligator. After the story hour we had the opportunity to look at all the pretty new books on display. We all chose one book we liked best to look at until our time was up to return to our room.

Thursday we helped Ella Mae Tousely celebrate her eighth birthday. Ella Mae's mother came up to school with a treat for us all. After we ate the delicious cupcakes and candy, we made cards and sang the birthday song to Ella Mae.

Charlene Sweet, Donald Bowerman and Bruce Shepard brought rocking chairs for us to use in our Library Center. They are all red and look very pretty in front of our newly constructed fireplace.

Carol Fales and Sally Gidley brought their new books to school. They won these books in the Book Fair poster contest Nov. 19. Mrs. Johnston is reading from Carol's book first which is "Gelaldine Belinda", after which she'll read Sally's book, "Peter Pan and Wendy".

Visitors to our room last week were David's mother, Mrs. Griffin, and Jimmy Kidder's cousin, Jack Murray.

Mrs. Robertson, our school nurse, is testing our eyes this week.

Third Grade—Adeling Bowerman

Kenneth Sineway's cousin, Jimmie Sineway, is a new member in our room.

In spelling, we are spending the three days this week reviewing the 152 words we have had so far this year. We are finding that the lessons in our phonics skill-text reader are helping us a great deal in spelling as well as in our reading.

We started the second of our little reading phamplets, "America, Land I Love." We were interested in the Liberty Bell as a symbol of American Freedom. We are enjoying a book "Old Liberty Bell", which Marvin Crawford got from the Library.

Fourth Grade — Grace Galmore

The Book Fair, held Nov. 19th, was a great success as far as our boys and girls are concerned. They were thrilled at the wonderful array of books and were so pleased to be able to really look them over. Several picked our dog or horse stories or other animal books; one group had a lot of fun listening to some odd old folk rhymes in another book. The biographies belonging to the set with the orange covers pleased them also as we are now reading one of them—"Paul Revere". Besides the books the children enjoyed very much the story "My Father's Dragon" told by the storyteller.

We are busy practicing a little play for the Thanksgiving Assembly Program, Wednesday. Sharon Hughey, with Linda Murphy as substitute, is taking the part of a little pioneer girl; Don Derenzy, the part of a pioneer boy; Ronald Sulak, an Indian boy; Norma Gee, the mother; Donald Johnson, the father; Gerald Peters will be the announcer. Harold Murray is chairman of the stage properties committee and Linda Murphy of the costumes committee. If there is time for it, the whole room will sing a song, "Quaint Little Makepeace."

Fourth Grade — Jean Strehl

We are happy to welcome all our sick friends back to school.

Last Friday Miss Olstrom visited our room. We were glad she could visit our room and see how we work together.

Wednesday we are going to sing, "Swing the Shining Sickle", for our Thanksgiving assembly. Everyone s looking forward to the holidays.

David Halliday celebrated his birthday Nov. 26th. The boys and girls helped him celebrate by singing Happy Birthday and making birthday cards.

We have our Pilgrims books completed and will take them home on Wednesday. We wrote six stories. They are Indian Village, Indian Children, The Mayflower, The Pilgrims Arrice, and The First Thanksgiving.

In Health on Monday, we saw a movie, "Something You Didn't Eat." It helped us to better understand the basic seven foods. We can see how important it is for us to eat all kinds of foods and not just the ones we like.

Fifth Grade — Elizabeth Mosher

James Gidley won first prize in the P. T. C. poster contest for fourth, fifth and sixth grades. His prize was a nice copy of Robin Hood.

Alfred Nelson was very happy to report that his father is home from Korea.

We enjoyed the assembly last week very much.

The plants we started last fall are growing nicely. We hope they don't freeze week ends.

We enjoyed the story hour last Friday, also the chance to look at the new books on display in the gym.

Each of us told what our favorite book was last Friday and a little about it for English Class.

We are finding that practice pays off in doing arithmetic problems.

Several pupils began to "catch on" last week after many discouraging days.

Mrs. Kamradt is going to lead our girls in 4-H sewing. They plan to meet on Thursday afternoons.

Fifth Grade — Sadie Liskum

We have a large wasp nest that Bob Winstone brought to us. Bob found it while he was hunting with his father. We looked up Wasps in our reference books and found out that wasps were the earliest paper makers.

Judy Annear brought some very fine pictures of Plymouth, Massachusetts. The people who live there now, some of them descendants of the original Pilgrims, dress up in Pilgrim costumes and re-enact scenes from the early days. Some of the houses which were build in the 17th century are still being used. Replicas of tiny thatched huts have been made, and visitors can see how the early Pilgrims lived.

We had our first test on division tables. Four people had perfect scores. They were Judy Nemec, Bob Bulow, Jane Compau and Larry Gee.

Michigan Mirror

In the midst of every deer season, there is a group of Michiganders who decry the annual migration into the northland.

While they have a valid criticism of the needless human deaths that occur from carlessness or accident, they seem to devote most of their denunciation to the "cruelty" of killing poor dumb animals.

Now rises George A. Petrides of the department of fisheries and wild life at Michigan State College.

"Wild game is a crop," he contends; "it should be harvested."

In fact, he makes a strong case for the humantarian aspects of hunting. "Every Spring the breeding pheasants, quail, grouse, turkeys, ducks, geese, rabbits, squirrels and deer begin to raise families," he points out. "These young animals grow up during the warm months when food and weather are kind.

"By the time Autumn comes, the original Spring population of wild game has increased many. fold.

"But what happens to these animals? Are they chosen to live happily through the winter and in turn all raise more families in the spring? In order to protect the species, only the hardiest are chosen to live to spring. The surplus animals are lost to starvation, freezing, predators or disease."

This is a wasteful process, charges Petrides. "Thousands of animals die every year," he points out, "and death by starvation or freezing is a cruel death."

There is nothing cruel about hunting, he contends. "As grains and fruits, timber and beef are harvested as gifts of nature, so the harvest of game is given us. Man lives by nature's laws; he lives or dies according to whether he wisely uses the gifts, the resources given him.

"The wise use of the game crop definitely includes understanding that it should be harvested. As a renewable resource under proper managment, the wildlife of America can always be with us and our children and their offspring."

Just how valuable a resource Michigan game is illustrated by some figures compiled by Charles Shick of MSC's department of conservation.

The value of Michigan's fur crop last year was greater than $2 million. Rye crops that year were worth $1.38 million.

Seventy-six hundred tons of wild meat went on Michigan tables in '51. Its value was more than $10 million sugarbeets in '51 totalled $7 million) and it would provide food for a whole year for over 21,000 families of four persons each.

The cash value of fur and meat taken from Michigan woods last yeaf was $12 million, enough to purchase a thousand average-sized homes at today's prices.

Hunting provides another economic factor in Michigan's life—the money spent by hunters and their parties.

There were 700,000 small game hunters, 400,000 deer hunters and 20,000 trappers. To that can be added the great army of tourists, picnickers, naturalists and photographers who simply enjoy seeing wild birds and animals.

In the first eight months of this year, 35 people were killed in farm accidents. There were 603 serious mishaps and 14 persons were permanently disabled by them.

A hundred eighty-two were using unsafe methods; 39 didn't use safety devices which were available; 191 were hurrying so they grew careless and 33 were too tired to take proper care.

Farm homes aren't the havens we dream them as. A hundred fifty-eight serious accidents occured in rural homes; 270 at farm work.

While Houston and New Orleans have been waging a Deep South battle for the honor of being America's second largest port, Michigan just quietly ups and walks away with the title for the third straght month.

It was Detroit that brought the honor to our state. It handled dollar volume of imports and exports second only to New York City.

During the first six months of this year, imports entering this country through the Motor City port were 1,438 percent greater than in 1933. Export trade in that same period, increased 1,132 percent.

It's probably no accident that the 21 largest cities in the United States are located on navigable waters.

More Michiganders vacation in Florida than in any other state.. except their own. It's been estimated that over 200,000 from Michigan visited Florida last year.

Look for demands upon the Michigan Legislature to revise that laws which whack up the cost of railroad grade separation. Typical is a Detroit case where 12 such grade separations are proposed. The five railroads involved would be assessed a total of $2.94 million compared to the public's cost of $16.66 million.

The Detroit Times puts the argument in a nutshell: "The taxpayer can't understand why he should pay huge amounts to keep out of the train's way. It would seem more logical that the railroads pay the cost of keeping out of the taxpayers' way".

A Michigan survey shows that the average allowance for high school youngsters is $2 to $3 per week It also shows that inflation day rates for baby sitting and other teen age chores bring an average income of almost $10.

Michigan's Isle Royal is the only national park which cannot be reached by automobile. The National Parks Services of the U. S. Department of Interior has just announced that 96.5 percent of all visitors to national parks travel there by auto.

Isle Royale's 2,370 visitors in 1951 came by boat or plane. That number is the smallest of any national park; even Alaska's Mt. McKinley had 8,634. Then comes Big Bend in Texas with 82,956 and after that all parks number visitors in six figures.

You could drive the distance around the world four times and more without getting off a Michigan road or backtracking as much as a city block. Michigan has a total of 106,896 miles of roads and streets.

Of this, 92,756 is rural; 14,137 urban and 80,892 are surfaced.

NEWS RELEASE ON CHRISTMAS TREE LAW

The Michigan Department of Agriculture has established inspection stations at several places on the highways leading from the Christmas tree producing areas of the state. State inspectors at the stations will check on Christmas trees and boughs being transported to determine if they are accompanied by a bill of sale as required by state law. Other inspectors will free lance in the tree and bough-cutting area and in metropolitan centers to see if the provisions of the state law are complied with.

State laws require that Christmas trees be accompanied by a bill of sale signed by the property owner from whom the trees originated. The bill of sale is proof the trees have been legally acquired by the person who has them in his possession.

The bill of sale forms are furnished by the Michigan Department of Agriculture free of charge. They are available at the offices of the County Agr'l Agents, Co. Sheriff, the State Police barracks, and Conservation headquarters in all counties of the state. Land owners who desire to transport Christmas trees or evergreen boughs taken from their own property may carry the property deed or a tax receipt in lieu of a legal bill of sale.

The Department of Conservation and State Police cooperate with the Department in the enforcement of the Christmas tree law.

The provisions of the Christmas tree law do not apply to the transportation of trees with roots attached. Such trees are classed as nurery stock and an inspection certificate is required when such trees are transported. Anyone desiring to move rooted trees or shrubs from one property to another should apply to the Department of Agriculture for inspection before the trees or shrubs are moved. Requests for further information and bill of sale forms may be obtained from C. A. Boyer, Chief, Bureau of Plant Industry, Michigan Department of Agriculture.

FARM FACTS from your County Agricultural Agent

Ed. Rebman, Co. Agr'l Agent

Feeding and handling a dairy herd takes most of a farmer's time if it is his main farm enterprise. He can cut labor with a well-planned barn, suggests Ed Rebman, county agricultural agent. If a dairyman prefers a stanchion barn, he can cut labor costs per animal to a minimum by careful planning of his barn. The well-planned pen barn, or loose housing unit can cut over-all chore time 15 to 25 percent below that in a stanchion barn, Rebman reports. The pen barn farmer must be a better manager.

The area required per animal in either the stanchion barn or the loose-housing barn is approximately the same. The feed alleys, the gutter and the area behind the gutter required for each animal in the stanchion barn takes about the same space as the feeding, lounging and milking areas for each animal in a loose-housing barn.

The stanchion barn is operated as a warn barn. The cattle are tied and are restricted in their movement. The operator brings the feed to the animals.

The loose-housing barn is operated as a cold-barn. The animals are free to move about. The animal goes to the feed and saves the operator in the feeding chores.

Some farm operators have crowded more animals into the barn by using stanchions than they could put into the same building as a loose-housing barn. Once the stanchions are in the barn, the number of animals that can be handled is fixed.

The loose-housing barn is more flexible in its use. The number of animals can increase or decrease and, at least temporarily, the loose-housing barn can take some overcrowding. It is also possible to change enterprizes in the pen barn much easier than where a stanchion barn is set up. In new construction or in remodeling, the cost for a well-planned loose-housing barn is usually much less than that of the stanchion barn. Much less equipment is required.

In general, the loose-housing barn requires more bedding than the stanchion barn; however, the bedding needs in a loose-housing barn are not much greater than in a stanchion barn where the farmer does a good job of bedding the cows. It is easier to skimp or save bedding in the stanchion barn if bedding is short. The additional bedding in the pen barn is not lost. More manure is returned to the farmer from the loose-housing barn.

The key factor in the successful operation of a loose-housing or pen-type barn is the basic arrangement of the unit. The well-planned pen barn provides a feeding area, a lounging area and a milking area. The animals do not use the lounging area except for resting purposes. A well-planned pen barn will yield clean, comfortable, healthy animals.

Good management pays off for the farmer whether he is using a stanchion barn or a loose housing type of barn. However, good management is more essential to the pen barn operation than to a stanchion barn operation.

Winter days are a good time to get some paint back on farm equipment, suggests Ed Rebman, county agricultural agent. It will make it last longer, give better service and all to its value when you want to trade for new machinery, he points out.

If a farmer is not certain of the color or kind of paint to use, he should see his implement dealer, is the advice from Michigan State College agricultural engineers.

Rust and grease should be thoroughly cleaned away first.

The root cellar, dairy barn, poultry house or other place on the farm where there may be moisture is no place to store your valuable fall fertilizer purchases, warns Ed Rebman, county agricultural agent.

Well-cured fertilizer can be stored without damage or caking in the fall—unlike some newly-made fertilizer bought in the spring, the county agricultural agent notes. Keep it off damp floors by raising it on a platform. Two-by-fours on edge, with some boards on top separated by up to a half foot for air passage, makes a good platform, according to Michigan State College agricultural engineers. Caking can be caused by weight of sacks if they are piled more than 10 sacks high. Keep out all moisture—including snow— and see that there is ventilation and fertilizer will be ready to apply when needed.

DRY WEATHER HARD ON FOREST LANDS

The period of dry weather during October and early November was hard on Michigan's forest lands because of fire hazard, but the conservation department points out that this was offset to some extent by a re-establishment of shorelines along the Great Lakes.

During most of the summer, lake levels were at record heights and caused teriffic damage to shoreline properties.

Now, however, state parks report beaches are widening as lake levels drop. By late October, lakes Michigan and Huron had dropped about afoot from summer highs.

"Any Deer" Season November 28-30 Inclusive

Crossed fingers are the high sign as Michigan's frst large-scale "any deer" season draws near.

Hunters and game technicians are hoping for the best while halfway expecting the worst.

The "any deer" season means just what the term implies. During the last three days of the regular season, Nov. 28-30 inclusive, hunters can take any deer in the north half of the lower peninsula.

Bucks, does, even fawns—all will be legal tarkets.

It's a drastic measure to make a bad condition better.

The bad condition s the demonstrable fact that there are too many deer in large areas—even whole counties—in the lower peninsula deer range.

The consequence has been that many thousands of deer—an estimated 40,000 in one recent winter—have starved.

The condition isn't something that has come about overnight. It has been building up over a period of a quarter-century or more. In brief, what's happened is this:

The herd never was large until woodsmen chopped down most of Michigan's trees. Deer don't have giraffes' long necks and they cannot get enough to eat when trees grow tall. In the first decades following the lumbering era when second growth trees were small, deer multiplied rapidly. But the new trees grew taller and the deer range shrank as intensive resort development materialized.

And the herd was in trouble as soon as the food supply started downhill.

Areas in the north half of the lower peninsula where losses of deer from starvation have been heaviest include Oscoda, Crawford, Roscommon, and parts of surrounding counties, running north through Montmorecy county into the southern edges of Presque Isle and Cheboygan counties and including the Pigeon River country in Oscoda county and, farther west, taking in the northern part of Newaygo county, all of Lake county, and running northward into Wexford and Manistee counties.

Michigan's deer are a valuable asset. They represent a good many million pounds of edible meat-on-the-hoof, they attract close to a half million deer hunters annually who spend a good many millions of dollars in their pursuit.

What threatens the herd is a threat also to Michigan's economy.

Michigan has been slow in applying standard farm practice to the control of its deer herd. No farmer who hopes to keep solvent will pasture more cattle in his fields than can find food there. But legislators, badgered by resort interests who believe with good reason that deer attract paying guests in summer and by softhearted citizens who hudder when the 'slaughter'" of does and fawns is mentioned, have been loath to approve measures designed to bring the herd in line with food supply.

Heavy starvation losses in recent seasons have forced the issue; legislators during the last regular session gave the conservation department limited authority to liberalize regulations to permit taking of "any deer" in a section of the state where the problem is most acute.

SCIENTIFIC APPROACH IN FACT FINDING

If it's good enough for big business it's good enough for the conservation department.

The scientific approach in finding, that is.

The department wants to know how many antlerless deer are killed in a special three-day season, November 28-30, and it wants the information in a hurry.

So it is turning to the University of Michigan's survey research center whose services have been used by the Detroit Edison Company only recently.

The research center, in turn, has assigned Dr. Benjamin Tepping, on leave from the Bureau of Census, Washington, D. C., to the job of getting the answers for the conservation department.

The center's method involves "sampling" of hunters who will be interviewed personally by department workers during the first week in December.

Tepping says that scientific selection of hunters to be interviewed plus carefully-worded questionaires will turn up advance data that will be proved amazingly accurate when all returns are in.

With legislation blessings, the department is opening counties in the north half of the lower pensula to the taking of any deer in the last three days of this month's regular gun season as a means of reducing a deer herd that has outrun it natural food supply.

The university's research center engages in fact finding for both business and government.

The Servicemens' LETTER

Hi Fellas:

The bucks aren't coming into town so fast now. After the first two days the number killed fell off sharply as usual. The weather has been foul, putrid, etc. No decent self-respecting deer would abroad in such stuff anyway. It's only such things as deer hunters that are foolish enough to get out in such stuff.

The last I heard from Don Trojanek, he was still cooling his heels in Camp Kilmer waiting for shipment. That's a rather dismal place to wait around in, too.

Don Neumann is home on leave this week. He has acquired quite a southern drawl from being around the sailors in Baltimore—quite a sea dog I'd say. Don is due back on board the Apolachie on December 3rd.

I have a note here which informs us that Dave Vallance is on the move from Texas up to Kansas. Does someone have his new address?

Jim Raymond has also left San-Antonio. His new address is A|B James E. Raymond, AF 16 425 729, 815th A. B. Gp, Forbes AFB, Topeka, Kansas. Can it be that he and Dave went up there together?

Here's a letter from Dale Lavanway informing us that: "Hello. Well I have a new address again. It seems that the Army likes to move me around. This is the fifth army base I have been on in the past 8 months. My address is: Pvt. Dale Lavanway, RA 16 404 493, Co. B, 8617 AAW, A. H. S., Arlington, Virginia. This post is located near the Pentagon Building in Washington, D. C. We are just across the Potomac River. I do not know how long I will be here.

'The barracks are nice here compared to other posts. We have cement block buildings, divided into sections with about 4 to 6 men in a section.

'I got a letter from Norman Beal who is over in Korea. He says he is working in a motor pool now."

Thanks for the letter, Dale. Being around Washington can be pretty sweet—but isn't there an awful lot of brass there too?

Ed Drapeau has ben moved up to Sacramento, Calif. His new address is: A|3C Jean E. Drapeau, 3537 Maint Sq, Box 456, Mather AFB, Sacramento, Calif. That's the same base where Lawrence Elsworth is located. You can find him in the 3535 Maint Sqd, Ed. Ed is supposed to stay at Mather for about one month and then only the Air Force knows where.

Berton Bunker has a new battalion address at same camp. It is: Pvt Berton E. Bunker, Btry A, 4th AAA Tng Bn, Fort Bliss, Texas.

Here's a new man in the Coast Guard. James Arnott has just signed up with them and his address is as follows: James Arnott (308-366) SR, Company E-16, Barracks 2, U. S. C. G. Rec Center, Cape May, New Jersey. Good Luck, Jim.

Lyle Peck appeared over the horizon this past week. He looks as though they had given him a rather rough time down in Fort Leonard Wood. PeeWee never did have too much meat on his bones but they sure took some off. He complains that they didn't feed him very well. Says they gave him C-Rations about three days out of every month. And not enough of them even. Lyle has graduated from the Army Engineer training course and is home on a short leave prior to reporting in Seattle, Washington, on Dec. 1st. He's hoping that if he does go directly overseas that he goes past Jim McLaughlin in Japan. He says he sure will collect on that offer of Jim's.

Raymond Romback has new overseas address. It is Pvt Raymond R. Romback, US 55 248 362, Hq Co, 31st Inf Regt, APO 7, c|o P M, San Francisco, Calif. That APO 7 would indicate that Ray is in the 7th Division along with Glen Young who is in the 707th Ord M. Co. You two men probobly do not know each other but you better drop in and say hello if your outfits are nearby.

Here's Howard Evans overseas address. Howard is on his way to Austria, you remember. M|Sgt Howard O. Evans, RA 16 263 485, Prov Co 3016, APO 168, c|o PM, New York, N. Y.

The Morris twins are still studying hard in Fort Devens, Massachusetts. Here's a letter from Darwin. "Guess I better get on the ball and write you a few lines. We are both fine and busy. Going to school every day but Sunday. We have a few weeks left. Be both like it real well.

'We sure enjoy getting the E. J. paper and also like the way those fellows have played football this fall. We sure want to thank those who make it possible for us to receive this paper.

'Michigan and State have been doing OK in the line of football, too. Maryland getting beat by Mississippi yesterday was quite an upset.

'I suppose a lot of fellows were lucky enough to get a buck. I guess from all reports the deer hunting should be pretty good. I have bought me a shotgun and have been doing a little hunting here. I got a duck yesterday afternoon. We can't hunt on Sundays here in Massashusetts. I want to hunt deer. The season is 1st to 6th of December. We can hunt here on Post with a post permit which doesn't cost us anything.

'We have had a nice fall here only awful dry. We had our first snow last Sunday but it went off Monday.

'We have a little cange in address—there isn't much to it now. Pvts Darwin and Delwin Morris, Co B, T. A. S. A. S. R., 8622 AA-U, Fort Devens, Mass."

Thanks for the letter, Darwin. Good luck in your hunting.

Last but not least is this letter from Hershel Young over in Port Lyenty.

"Bet everyone at home is getting ready for Christmas. We are over here, too. But it won't seem like Christmas over here with lots of rain and more rain. But we are going to have the finest tree we can find. Bet it will look like the scrubbist cedar in Michigan.

'Clare Loomis from MCB 8 will be out with us for Thanksgiving. Sure hope we can get an American turkey.

'Well, Jake, we have a canasta date up the road aways so I had better knock off. I will really get busy and write a good letter some day and give you more news."

I note that Hersh's letter had a small change of address in the return portion. It is: H. C. Young, CM-1, U. S. N. A. F., c|o FPO, New York, N. Y., Navy 214, Box A.

I'll take care of your request promptly, Hersh. I'll keep a record of the details here until I hear from you again. Give my regards to your family and to Clare.

That's all for tonight, men.

IMPROPER BRINE DISPOSAL PRACTICES BY OIL PRODUCER JOS. FITDIETT

Joseph Fitchett, Bloomingdale oil producer, will be tried in circuit court of Ingham county December 1st on a charge of improper brine disposal practices, the conservation department reports.

Gerald E. Eddy, Michigan's supervisor of wells and head of the conservation department, brought the suit against Fitchett for practices used in producing oil from a well near Grand Rapids.

Often, subterranean brines are raised to the earth's surface during oil production process; disposal of these without causing pollution is a necessary part of oil work.

Though now controlled by statute, improper brine practices during the early days of Michigan's oil, gypsum and salt industries harmed ground water in some portions of the state.

Some city water systems had to be revamped because of this pollution; Grand Rapids now imports most of its water from Lake Michigan. Bay City, Saginaw and Flint are other cities forced to find water elsewhere because of polluted ground waters.

House Pets Can Cause Asthma

Your dog's whiskers or your cat's "meow" may be making you an asthma victim.

Dr. Robert G. Lovell, a Uinversity of Michigan allergist, says that dogs, birds and cats may give off tiny particles from their fur, feathers or skin to cause severe respiratory symptons in allergic persons.

Short haired or "non-shedding" animals can't be ruled out either, he cautions. That's because it's often the saliva of the pet which dries and blows in tiny particles through the air like pollen to bring on asthma.

Thus, a cat's friendly "meow" can actually be an asthma victim's enemy.

Animal dander also carries trouble for the asthmatic as it floats in the air, either from a pet or a rug pad made of hog or cattle hair.

Medical treatment of such asthma patients usually requires giving the animal pad away to eliminate the allergy, Dr. Lovell says.

TURKEY TIME

But before that delectable bird holds forth at the head of your Thanksgiving table you may want to do some thinking about buying him. Dr. Pauline Paul of the foods and nutrition department, Michigan State College, recommends investigation into the various ways turkey can be purchased these days.

First of all, Dr. Paul says, suit your turkey purchase to the size of your family. A small family can have a traditional Thanksgiving dinner now without eating turkey for two weeks afterwards, by buying small whole turkey, turkey halves or turkey pieces.

Turkey broilers may be the answer to your problem. They weigh from four to five pounds dressed and may be split and broiled or stuffed and roasted in the usual manner.

Or, look for turkey pieces. A whole breast will serve two to four persons or a thigh and drumsticks will take care of two, Dr. Paul advises. This buying by the piece is also good if the family has particular preference about light and dark meat. Dr. Paul says that turkey pieces may be fried, broiled, roasted or made into fricassee. If you roast or broil the pieces brush them with fat occasionally during the cooking to keep the pieces from drying out.

In some markets half turkeys are available. In this case the carcass has been sawed in half along the back bone. Stuff the body cavity as you would a whole bird and hold in the stuffing with a covering of waxed paper or aluminum foil. Place the half turkey on a rack, stuffing side down, to roast, Dr. Paul recommends.

Avoid a turkey hangover at your house this Thanksgiving time. Don't bring in the turkey meal after meal in its orginal roasted form—try some interesting variations on the traditional theme.

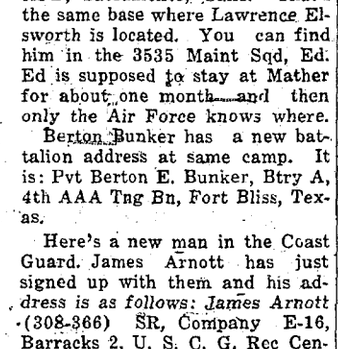

Dr. Pauline Paul of the Michigan State College foods and nutrition department offers three ways to use left-over turkey. She suggests freezing it for later use, making a turkey loaf or heating the turkey slices and covering with an interesting sauce.

To freeze turkey Dr. Paul urges you to bone the bird and have the meat ready to serve when you remove it from the freezer.

Turkey loaf will make a "company dinner". Chopped turkey, cooked noodles or spaghetti, chopped stuffed olives, chopped celery, a little grated onion, salt and pepper mixed together and moistened with turkey gravy or white sauce will do it. Turn the mixture into a loaf pan and bake with a layer of buttered crumbs on top.

Turkey slices can be heated on top of the stove in a double boiler, or do them in the oven, but take care to avoid drying out the slices, Dr. Paul stressses. Slices placed in the oven may be covered loosely or kept moist with a sauce. Left-over turkey gravy or stock or a little milk would give variety to warmed turkey slices the day after Thanksgiving. For devilled turkey, cover slices with a highly seasoned tomato sauce. Or Dr. Paul suggests a sweet-sour sauce or a barbecue sauce.

CHARLEVOIX TELEPHONE NUMBER CHANGES WILL SPEED YOUR CALLS

Your telephone calls to Charlevoix will go through faster . . . starting at 1:00 p.m. Thursday, December 4.

Then Charlevoix will get dial service . . . and new telephone numbers, each with an office name, LIberty, and five numerals.

You can dial those new numbers direct, starting next Thursday, the same as you now dial other nearby communities direct.

Your new Charlevoix alphabetical directory lists the new numbers. It's a good idea to jot down for future use those numbers you call frequently.

The number of telephones in your local calling area has doubled since World War II. With so many more telephones in service, your telephone becomes increasingly more valuable because you can call more people and more can call you.

These steps are part of a long-range expansion and improvement program, making your telephone service a bigger bargain than ever before.

Tid-Bits

By UNO HOO

Finances these days are gettin' tuff. Little Jimmy cums in Saturday nite an' sez, have you got a job I kin do to make a nickle so I kin go to the show. I sez, kind of late in the day to try to make a nickle ain't it? Jimmy sez well I could sweep the floor er sumpin, ignoring my question. How kin ya turn a guy like that down, I liked his persaverance. So I sez, go dump the waste basket. OK and off he goes. Fifteen minutes later back cums Jimmy with his brother, Joe, er sumpin. Joe hain't got enuf money either, he just lacks a penny. So gullible me, I gives him a penny. So then Jimmy sez to Joe, you got more pieces of candy 'n I got. So I sez, well where's my piece'a candy.? They both turns around 'n sez we'll give you sum, and both proceed to dig me out a piece of candy. Then out the door they go happy as could be, me too. I sorta enjoyed their big deal.

About 10 o'clock Tuesday night we thought someone had dropped an atomic bomb on Main St. We rushed out and saw Mac across at the Temple just coming out to investigate. He looked around a bit and found one of his youthful customers had a long split on his bicycle tire. Who would think a blown out bicycle tire could make all that noise?

That's a feller here in town what helps to run a restaurant, and just tryin' to be good to his wife, he sez, I'll let you sleep a couple 'a hours this mornin', dear. So she cuddles down under the covers and shuts her eyes real tight to keep out the light and tries to get real hard of hearin'. Then the dutiful father begins to get himself dressed and begins callin' his son to get up fer school. This goes on fer half an hour, and then all is quiet. Junior starts fer school, Papa starts for work, and Mama snuggles down for another forty winks, and jest dozes off when "bang", open comes the front door, and Papa yells, Mama when do you want me to wake you up!

I'll betcha papa's runnin' yet. Then to top it off he tells his cronies he let Mama sleep a coupla hours this mornin' Guess they all made up last time we say tho.

We noticed in last week's Rotary Club bulletin an article by Richard Malpass concerning the emptyness of several buildings in the business district, with more to come, and suggests there are openings for businesses in the service line. Quite possibly Dick is right. Then, too, you hear the hue and cry from the school kids and adults that "What we need is a new factory here in town." Is this what East Jordan needs? If you think it is are you willing to invest $500 or more in a building to house same, along with other investors, that some industry may buy it back on long terms and small interest. Apparently that is the only way to attract industry now. Boyne City just did it. Central Lake did it. Ellsworth did it. Mancelona did it. Ater all is said and done, if you want MORE industry YOU have to BUY it, although more or less indirectly. Seemingly there is no other way.

AN APPRECIATION

I wish to take this means to thank my many friends and neighbors for calling on me and for the many flowers and gifts, cards and letters. Also my thanks to the East Jordan Masonic Lodge and Jassamine Rebekah Lodge for their remembrances while I was in the Charlevoix and Munson Hospitals.

Catholic Churches Sponsor Clothing Drive This Week

Catholic churches in the 29 county Diocese of Grand Rapids are againg sponsoring a Thanksgiving Clothing Collection.

Under the auspices of the War Relicf Services of the National Catholic Welfare Council, this drive is scheduled to get under way during Thanksgiving week, November 23 to 30.

Each parish has designated a collection depot and anyone with wearable, warm clothing to donate may drop it off at the church or depot nearest them or they may call the church and ask for pick-up service.

All clothing collected will be carefully boxed to be sent to the poorly clad victims of war in Korea, the Far East and Europe. Millions of men, women and children of different races and creeds are being clothed each year through the generosity of Americans who contribute to this Thanksgiving Clothing Collection.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Freese Celebrate 70th Anniversary

Saturday, Nov. 22, marked the 70th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Freese of East Jordan. The event is a record, perhaps for the state of Michigan, and Mr. and Mrs. Freese were honored by neighbors and friends.

A large cake, made by Mrs. Eileen Brennan and Mrs. Joan Dennis, highlighted the occasion. Open House was held at Grandvue Convalescent Hospital where the couple live and friends called during the afternoon and evening.

Both in good health, Mrs. Freese is 88 years and Mr. Freese is 90. They were married in Little Traverse, a community now called Good Hart, near Petoskey, in 1882. After their marriage they moved to East Jordan where they have lived the past 70 years.

NATURE PLAYED TRICK ON DOE

Nature played tricks on one unfortunate doe shot during first day of deer season, the conservation department reports.

Morris Norton, Hersey, brought down the 120-pound doe while hunting west of Big Stone Lake, Osceola county.

But Norton could hardly be prosecuted for shooting this doe; the animal was carrying a five-point antler rack when shot. Game men say this happens occasionally when sex glands are damaged during an animal's growth.

South Arm Farm Bureau Met With Mrs. Delbert Ingalls

The November meeting of the South Arm Farm Bureau was held at the Delbert Ingalls home, with thirteen members and four guests present.

Our county rpresentative, Warren Frank, reported that the State Farm Bureau had passed a resolution stating that all dues for 1953 must be in by January 15th, or the Blue Cross insurance will be canceled.

Very interesting reports were given by the ladies who attendd the State Convention of Farm Bureau Women at M. S. C., namely, Mrs. Edward Kamradt, Mrs. J. M. Ingalls, Mrs. Howard Donaldson and Mrs. T. Floyd French. They all agreed that the meeting was very worthwhile and hoped that more from our group would attend next year.

We will soon be starting a new year and we are hoping to see more of our members in regular attendance. One member, who attended Tuesday night, was heard to remark that he never enjoyed a Farm Bureau meeting as much as that one. Come on, members, we need you and you need us!

THORNY PROBLEM

Nicholas V. Olds, assistant attorney general assigned to the conservation department, has filed an answer and crossbill in the thorny problem of Lake Ann, Presque Isle county.

The court case was started recently to solve the question of whether or not fishermen have rightful access to the lake.

Henry M. Lucy, owner of property surrounding the lake, says they do not. Attorney Olds says a small stream outlet is navigable public water and therefore does provide fishermen access to the lake.

The question is not scheduled for a court hearing for several weeks.

Electric Service Interruptions Caused by Hunters in This Area

Shots from guns of hunters, apparently intentionally, cut off Consumers Power Company's electric service in several communities in the Company's Northwest Division. Division Manager, Bob D. Hilty, said there were several interruptions Saturday afternoon, Nov. 22, when something, apparently a bullet, from a deer hunter's rifle severed a high voltage transmission line one-half mile east of Mio, about 30 miles east of Grayling. Mr. Hilty said several shots rang out just before the line parted. He said that several marks, apparently caused by bullets, were found on a conductor near the break in the lines.

Service interruptions were kept fairly brief through rerouting of the power supply. Some areas were without power for a few minutes and others nearly an hour. Line crews completed repair of the line some hours later.

Mr. Hilty said that the line was the third transmission line in the Company's area to be damaged by bullets in this year's deer season.

E. J. H. S. Basketball Five Open Season at Alpena Tuesday Evening, Dec. 2nd

East Jordan High School will open its 1952-53 basketball season at Alpena, Tuesday evening, Dec. 2nd, when they meet the Class B Alpena Catholic Central quintet, one of the outstanding Class B aggregations in the State last winter.

The "Red Devils" will entertain the Pellston "Hornets" here, Friday, night, Dec. 5th, at the local high school gym in the conference opener for both schools.

The probable starting lineup for Tuesday's opener will find Warren Frank and Richard Freeman at the forward posts, Steve Hayden at center, and James Shepard and Keith Evans at the guard slots. Only Evans and Shepard were regulars last winter, and although five other letterwinners are on hand, this year's aggregation will be short on experience. Gaylord, with eleven lettermen back, along with the always potential Charlevoix quintet are favorites to battle it out for this year's Northern Michigan Class C Conference crown.

We voted to have joint installation of Officers with the Odd Fellows.

Am. Legion Auxiliary Urges Members Cooperation

The American Legion Auxiliary Unit 227 held a semi-social meeting at the Legion Home Tuesday, Nov. 18. The attendance was very small. All the officers and active members have been working very hard to carry on the work required of the Auxiliary but more support from all the membership must be had if we are to do a good job. So if you have not been attending meetings try and get out if it is possible. Everyone realizes that with so many members working especially during the summer, it is hard but now that some of the work is slacking off let's see if we can't bring up the membehship attendance and show the officers all the members of the Unit are behind them.

Several fine committee reports were given. Thora Kotowich, chairman, said the mixed chorus has postponed the meeting until after the first of the year. Florence Stucker, Jr. Activities chairman, informed us that her Juniors are ready and anxious to get started on the toy repair project for the Community Christmas program, but they need more toys to work on. The Jr. Auxiliary hold their meetings every second and fourth Saturday of the month at the Legion Home. Peggy Thomas, Community Service Chairman, will soon have several dolls that will have to be dressed for the Christmas boxes so if anyone would care to dress a doll contact her and she will appreciate it.

November being membership month in the Auxiliary, Hilda Bathke, membership chairman, was hostess of the evening. For entertainmnt Hilda called on Mary Lou Breakey to assist her with a little surprise stunt. Mary Lou was asked to remove her coat and when she did she was weaing a sign across her chest reading Membership Chairman, and had an apron tied about her waist made of dollar bills representing dues collected by her for Hilda's team, so now that Mary Lou has taken over one team the competition should be keen. She is working against Lillian Bennett, captain of the other team, and also her sister. There has been an official announcement. as to which team is ahead but to date we have 77 members. We still have a lot to go if we are to fill our quota this year. If you are a member and have not paid your current dues as yet or if you are eligible and wish to join the Auxiliary be sure and contact one of the captains. The membership contest will last through November. Following the meeting a nice lunch of potato salad, rolls, cake, doughnuts and coffee was served by the hostess. Everyone had a fine time. Next Auxiliary meeting to be Tuesday, Dec. 9, at the Legion Home at 8 o'clock. Be sure and attend as this is a very important meeting.

Captain Alexander was born November 10, 1871 in Grand Blanc, Mich., son of John and Debora Alexander. He passed away at Algona Hospital, Kewanee, Wisconsin, Nov. 17th, 1952, at the age of 81 years.

He came to East Jordan with his parents at the age of 10 years. His life's work was on the Lakes, on the Louie A. Cummins plying between Traverse City and East Jordan, then for the Northern Michigan Transportation Co., Chicago, on the Charlevoix, Petoskey and Missouri. In 1909 he worked for the U. S. S. Engineering Dept. at Milwaukee. Retired in 1940. He had made his home in Kewaunee, Wis., the past 24 years and was a 32nd degree Mason.

Surviving are his wife, Sara Snyder; a son, Winfield, and two grandchildren, Helen and Bruce, and one sister, Mrs. Lois Pinney of N. Manchester, Ind.

Herald Sponsoring 'Best Hunting Story' Contest

The Herald is sponsoring a contest of the most unusual and interesting hunting experiences. It need not have taken place this year. Literary excellence is immaterial.

Prizes of $5, $3 and $2 dollars will be awarded to the hunters who write the three best experiences to the Herald Office within the next five weeks. A committee of interested persons consisting of three in number will act as judges of the letters to be printed each week up to and including Jan. 1, 1953.

The prize money will be deposited at the State Bank of East Jordan for the lucky hunters.

Come on fellows, let's have some lively letters, and your experience for next week's Herald. You have five weeks to go. There must really be some good stories, why not let us have them?

First Grade — Mrs. Stokes

Billy Darbee, Laura Grauel and Velma Sweet celebrated their birthdays by bringing birthday cake or cupcakes for all of us.

Virginia Barnes and Otto Hughey left us recently to go somewhere else to school.

We have been learning about the first Thanksgiving. We drew pictures about it, too.

We are enjoying our milk each morning and are glad the Community Chest people are seeing that we have it.

Peggy Nelson celebrated her sixth birthday by bringing a birthday cake complete with candles. Her little sister came to school on Peggy's birthday. Peggy said the nicest thing about her birthday was having her Daddy home from Korea.

We were glad to have Phyllis Sineway enter our room on Tuesday.

First Grade — Marion Brooks

Terry Lord brought his cousins, Jack and Ronnie Murray to visit us a few days.

We enjoyed the picture on Finger Painting and would really like to try it.

The "Rabbits" the the first to finish the set of Pre-primers.

Inky in Jack and Jill showed us how to draw a picture of the Mayflower. It was fun and we made some nice looking boats.

Second Grade — Agnes Johnston

We are making covers for our new spelling booklets. We chose to make a November design for our covers.

We are preparing Thanksgiving songs for our assembly Wednesday afernoon. We like to sing the "Thankful" song best. This song is in our new music books.

Tuesday we enjoyed the movie "The King of Kings". This was a story about wheat. It told how important it was to start out each day with a good breakfast.

Wednesday we went in the gymnasium to see the Book Fair Exhibit. Miss Chamberlin, the storyteller from Petoskey, told us the story, "When the Mississippi Went Wild". This was a very interesting legend about an alligator. After the story hour we had the opportunity to look at all the pretty new books on display. We all chose one book we liked best to look at until our time was up to return to our room.

Thursday we helped Ella Mae Tousely celebrate her eighth birthday. Ella Mae's mother came up to school with a treat for us all. After we ate the delicious cupcakes and candy, we made cards and sang the birthday song to Ella Mae.

Charlene Sweet, Donald Bowerman and Bruce Shepard brought rocking chairs for us to use in our Library Center. They are all red and look very pretty in front of our newly constructed fireplace.

Carol Fales and Sally Gidley brought their new books to school. They won these books in the Book Fair poster contest Nov. 19. Mrs. Johnston is reading from Carol's book first which is "Gelaldine Belinda", after which she'll read Sally's book, "Peter Pan and Wendy".

Visitors to our room last week were David's mother, Mrs. Griffin, and Jimmy Kidder's cousin, Jack Murray.

Mrs. Robertson, our school nurse, is testing our eyes this week.

Third Grade—Adeling Bowerman

Kenneth Sineway's cousin, Jimmie Sineway, is a new member in our room.

In spelling, we are spending the three days this week reviewing the 152 words we have had so far this year. We are finding that the lessons in our phonics skill-text reader are helping us a great deal in spelling as well as in our reading.

We started the second of our little reading phamplets, "America, Land I Love." We were interested in the Liberty Bell as a symbol of American Freedom. We are enjoying a book "Old Liberty Bell", which Marvin Crawford got from the Library.

Fourth Grade — Grace Galmore

The Book Fair, held Nov. 19th, was a great success as far as our boys and girls are concerned. They were thrilled at the wonderful array of books and were so pleased to be able to really look them over. Several picked our dog or horse stories or other animal books; one group had a lot of fun listening to some odd old folk rhymes in another book. The biographies belonging to the set with the orange covers pleased them also as we are now reading one of them—"Paul Revere". Besides the books the children enjoyed very much the story "My Father's Dragon" told by the storyteller.

We are busy practicing a little play for the Thanksgiving Assembly Program, Wednesday. Sharon Hughey, with Linda Murphy as substitute, is taking the part of a little pioneer girl; Don Derenzy, the part of a pioneer boy; Ronald Sulak, an Indian boy; Norma Gee, the mother; Donald Johnson, the father; Gerald Peters will be the announcer. Harold Murray is chairman of the stage properties committee and Linda Murphy of the costumes committee. If there is time for it, the whole room will sing a song, "Quaint Little Makepeace."

Fourth Grade — Jean Strehl

We are happy to welcome all our sick friends back to school.

Last Friday Miss Olstrom visited our room. We were glad she could visit our room and see how we work together.

Wednesday we are going to sing, "Swing the Shining Sickle", for our Thanksgiving assembly. Everyone s looking forward to the holidays.

David Halliday celebrated his birthday Nov. 26th. The boys and girls helped him celebrate by singing Happy Birthday and making birthday cards.

We have our Pilgrims books completed and will take them home on Wednesday. We wrote six stories. They are Indian Village, Indian Children, The Mayflower, The Pilgrims Arrice, and The First Thanksgiving.

In Health on Monday, we saw a movie, "Something You Didn't Eat." It helped us to better understand the basic seven foods. We can see how important it is for us to eat all kinds of foods and not just the ones we like.

Fifth Grade — Elizabeth Mosher

James Gidley won first prize in the P. T. C. poster contest for fourth, fifth and sixth grades. His prize was a nice copy of Robin Hood.

We enjoyed the assembly last week very much.

The plants we started last fall are growing nicely. We hope they don't freeze week ends.

We enjoyed the story hour last Friday, also the chance to look at the new books on display in the gym.

Each of us told what our favorite book was last Friday and a little about it for English Class.

We are finding that practice pays off in doing arithmetic problems.

Several pupils began to "catch on" last week after many discouraging days.

Mrs. Kamradt is going to lead our girls in 4-H sewing. They plan to meet on Thursday afternoons.

Fifth Grade — Sadie Liskum

We have a large wasp nest that Bob Winstone brought to us. Bob found it while he was hunting with his father. We looked up Wasps in our reference books and found out that wasps were the earliest paper makers.

Judy Annear brought some very fine pictures of Plymouth, Massachusetts. The people who live there now, some of them descendants of the original Pilgrims, dress up in Pilgrim costumes and re-enact scenes from the early days. Some of the houses which were build in the 17th century are still being used. Replicas of tiny thatched huts have been made, and visitors can see how the early Pilgrims lived.

We had our first test on division tables. Four people had perfect scores. They were Judy Nemec, Bob Bulow, Jane Compau and Larry Gee.

Michigan Mirror

In the midst of every deer season, there is a group of Michiganders who decry the annual migration into the northland.

While they have a valid criticism of the needless human deaths that occur from carlessness or accident, they seem to devote most of their denunciation to the "cruelty" of killing poor dumb animals.

Now rises George A. Petrides of the department of fisheries and wild life at Michigan State College.

"Wild game is a crop," he contends; "it should be harvested."

In fact, he makes a strong case for the humantarian aspects of hunting. "Every Spring the breeding pheasants, quail, grouse, turkeys, ducks, geese, rabbits, squirrels and deer begin to raise families," he points out. "These young animals grow up during the warm months when food and weather are kind.

"By the time Autumn comes, the original Spring population of wild game has increased many. fold.

"But what happens to these animals? Are they chosen to live happily through the winter and in turn all raise more families in the spring? In order to protect the species, only the hardiest are chosen to live to spring. The surplus animals are lost to starvation, freezing, predators or disease."

This is a wasteful process, charges Petrides. "Thousands of animals die every year," he points out, "and death by starvation or freezing is a cruel death."

There is nothing cruel about hunting, he contends. "As grains and fruits, timber and beef are harvested as gifts of nature, so the harvest of game is given us. Man lives by nature's laws; he lives or dies according to whether he wisely uses the gifts, the resources given him.

"The wise use of the game crop definitely includes understanding that it should be harvested. As a renewable resource under proper managment, the wildlife of America can always be with us and our children and their offspring."

Just how valuable a resource Michigan game is illustrated by some figures compiled by Charles Shick of MSC's department of conservation.

The value of Michigan's fur crop last year was greater than $2 million. Rye crops that year were worth $1.38 million.

Seventy-six hundred tons of wild meat went on Michigan tables in '51. Its value was more than $10 million sugarbeets in '51 totalled $7 million) and it would provide food for a whole year for over 21,000 families of four persons each.

The cash value of fur and meat taken from Michigan woods last year was $12 million, enough to purchase a thousand average-sized homes at today's prices.

Hunting provides another economic factor in Michigan's life—the money spent by hunters and their parties.

There were 700,000 small game hunters, 400,000 deer hunters and 20,000 trappers. To that can be added the great army of tourists, picnickers, naturalists and photographers who simply enjoy seeing wild birds and animals.

In the first eight months of this year, 35 people were killed in farm accidents. There were 603 serious mishaps and 14 persons were permanently disabled by them.

A hundred eighty-two were using unsafe methods; 39 didn't use safety devices which were available; 191 were hurrying so they grew careless and 33 were too tired to take proper care.

Farm homes aren't the havens we dream them as. A hundred fifty-eight serious accidents occured in rural homes; 270 at farm work.

While Houston and New Orleans have been waging a Deep South battle for the honor of being America's second largest port, Michigan just quietly ups and walks away with the title for the third straght month.

It was Detroit that brought the honor to our state. It handled dollar volume of imports and exports second only to New York City.

During the first six months of this year, imports entering this country through the Motor City port were 1,438 percent greater than in 1933. Export trade in that same period, increased 1.132 percent.

It's probably no accident that the 21 largest cities in the United States are located on navigable waters.

More Michiganders vacation in Florida than in any other state.. except their own. It's been estimated that over 200,000 from Michigan visited Florida last year.

Look for demands upon the Michigan Legislature to revise that laws which whack up the cost of railroad grade separation. Typical is a Detroit case where 12 such grade separations are proposed. The five railroads involved would be assessed a total of $2.94 million compared to the public's cost of $16.66 million.

The Detroit Times puts the argument in a nutshell; "The taxpayer can't understand why he should pay huge amounts to keep out of the train's way. It would seem more logical that the railroads pay the cost of keeping out of the taxpayers' way".

A Michigan survey shows that the average allowance for high school youngsters is $2 to $3 per week It also shows that inflation day rates for baby sitting and other teen age chores bring an average income of almost $10.

Michigan's Isle Royal is the only national park which cannot be reached by automobile. The National Parks Services of the U. S. Department of Interior has just announced that 96.5 percent of all visitors to national parks travel there by auto.

Isle Royale's 2,370 visitors in 1951 came by boat or plane. That number is the smallest of any national park; even Alaska's Mt. McKinley had 8,634. Then comes Big Bend in Texas with 82,956 and after that all parks number visitors in six figures.

You could drive the distance around the world four times and more without getting off a Michigan road or backtracking as much as a city block. Michigan has a total of 106,896 miles of roads and streets.

Of this, 92,756 is rural; 14,137 urban and 80,892 are surfaced.

NEWS RELEASE ON CHRISTMAS TREE LAW

The Michigan Department of Agriculture has established inspection stations at several places on the highways leading from the Christmas tree producing areas of the state. State inspectors at the stations will check on Christmas trees and boughs being transported to determine if they are accompanied by a bill of sale as required by state law. Other inspectors will free lance in the tree and bough-cutting area and in metropolitan centers to see if the provisions of the state law are complied with.

State laws require that Christmas trees be accompanied by a bill of sale signed by the property owner from whom the trees originated. The bill of sale is proof the trees have been legally acquired by the person who has them in his possession.

The bill of sale forms are furnished by the Michigan Department of Agriculture free of charge. They are available at the offices of the County Agr'l Agents, Co. Sheriff, the State Police barracks, and Conservation headquarters in all counties of the state. Land owners who desire to transport Christmas trees or evergreen boughs taken from their own property may carry the property deed or a tax receipt in lieu of a legal bill of sale.

The Department of Conservation and State Police cooperate with the Department in the enforcement of the Christmas tree law.

The provisions of the Christmas tree law do not apply to the transportation of trees with roots attached. Such trees are classed as nurery stock and an inspection certificate is required when such trees are transported. Anyone desiring to move rooted trees or shrubs from one property to another should apply to the Department of Agriculture for inspection before the trees or shrubs are moved. Requests for further information and bill of sale forms may be obtained from C. A. Boyer, Chief, Bureau of Plant Industry, Michigan Department of Agriculture.

FARM FACTS from your County Agricultural Agent
Ed. Rebman, Co. Agr'l Agent

Feeding and handling a dairy herd takes most of a farmer's time if it is his main farm enterprise. He can cut labor with a well-planned barn, suggests Ed Rebman, county agricultural agent. If a dairyman prefers a stanchion barn, he can cut labor costs per animal to a minimum by careful planning of his barn. The well-planned pen barn, or loose housing unit can cut over-all chore time 15 to 25 percent below that in a stanchion barn, Rebman reports. The pen barn farmer must be a better manager.

The area required per animal in either the stanchion barn or the loose-housing barn is approximately the same. The feed alleys, the gutter and the area behind the gutter required for each animal in the stanchion barn takes about the same space as the feeding, lounging and milking areas for each animal in a loose-housing barn.

The stanchion barn is operated as a warn barn. The cattle are tied and are restricted in their movement. The operator brings the feed to the animals.

The loose-housing barn is operated as a cold-barn. The animals are free to move about. The animal goes to the feed and saves the operator in the feeding chores.

Some farm operators have crowded more animals into the barn by using stanchions than they could put into the same building as a loose-housing barn. Once the stanchions are in the barn, the number of animals that can be handled is fixed.

The loose-housing barn is more flexible in its use. The number of animals can increase or decrease and, at least temporarily, the loose-housing barn can take some overcrowding. It is also possible to change enterprizes in the pen barn much easier than where a stanchion barn is set up. In new construction or in remodeling, the cost for a well-planned loose-housing barn is usually much less than that of the stanchion barn. Much less equipment is required.

In general, the loose-housing barn requires more bedding than the stanchion barn; however, the bedding needs in a loose-housing barn are not much greater than in a stanchion barn where the farmer does a good job of bedding the cows. It is easier to skimp or save bedding in the stanchion barn if bedding is short. The additional bedding in the pen barn is not lost. More manure is returned to the farmer from the loose-housing barn.

The key factor in the successful operation of a loose-housing or pen-type barn is the basic arrangement of the unit. The well-planned pen barn provides a feeding area, a lounging area and a milking area. The animals do not use the lounging area except for resting purposes. A well-planned pen barn will yield clean, comfortable, healthy animals.

Good management pays off for the farmer whether he is using a stanchion barn or a loose housing type of barn. However, good management is more essential to the pen barn operation than to a stanchion barn operation.

Winter days are a good time to get some paint back on farm equipment, suggests Ed Rebman, county agricultural agent. It will make is last longer, give better service and all to its value when you want to trade for new machinery, he points out.

If a farmer is not certain of the color or kind of paint to use, he should see his implement dealer, is the advice from Michigan State College agricultural engineers.

Rust and grease should be thoroughly cleaned away first.

The root cellar, dairy barn, poultry house or other place on the farm where there may be moisture is no place to store your valuable fall fertilizer purchases, warns Ed Rebman, county agricultural agent.

Well-cured fertilizer can be stored without damage or caking in the fall—unlike some newly-made fertilizer bought in the spring, the county agricultural agent notes. Keep it off damp floors by raising it on a platform. Two-by-fours on edge, with some boards on top separated by up to a half foot for air passage, makes a good platform, according to Michigan State College agricultural engineers. Caking can be caused by weight of sacks if they are piled more than 10 sacks high. Keep out all moisture—including snow— and see that there is ventilation and fertilizer will be ready to apply when needed.

DRY WEATHER HARD ON FOREST LANDS

The period of dry weather during October and early November was hard on Michigan's forest lands because of fire hazard, but the conservation department points out that this was offset to some extent by a re-establishment of shorelines along the Great Lakes.

During most of the summer, lake levels were at record heights and caused teriffic damage to shoreline properties.

Now, however, state parks report beaches are widening as lake levels drop. By late October, lakes Michigan and Huron had dropped about afoot from summer highs.

"Any Deer" Season November 28-30 Inclusive

Crossed fingers are the high sign as Michigan's frst large-scale "any deer" season draws near.

Hunters and game technicians are hoping for the best while halfway expecting the worst.

The "any deer" season means just what the term implies. During the last three days of the regular season, Nov. 28-30 inclusive, hunters can take any deer in the north half of the lower peninsula.

Bucks, does, even fawns—all will be legal tarkets.

It's a drastic measure to make a bad condition better.

The bad condition s the demonstrable fact that there are too many deer in large areas—even whole counties—in the lower peninsula deer range.

The consequence has been that many thousands of deer—an estimated 40,000 in one recent winter—have starved.

The condition isn't something that has come about overnight. It has been building up over a period of a quarter-century or more. In brief, what's happened is this:

The herd never was large until woodsmen chopped down most of Michigan's trees. Deer don't have giraffes' long necks and they cannot get enough to eat when trees grow tall. In the first decades following the lumbering era when second growth trees were small, deer multiplied rapidly. But the new trees grew taller and the deer range shrank as intensive resort development materialized.

And the herd was in trouble as soon as the food supply started downhill.

Areas in the north half of the lower peninsula where losses of deer from starvation have been heaviest include Oscoda, Crawford, Roscommon, and parts of surrounding counties, running north through Montmorecy county into the southern edges of Presque Isle and Cheboygan counties and including the Pigeon River country in Oscoda county and, farther west, taking in the northern part of Newaygo county, all of Lake county, and running northward into Wexford and Manistee counties.

Michigan's deer are a valuable asset. They represent a good many million pounds of edible meat-on-the-hoof, they attract close to a half million deer hunters annually who spend a good many millions of dollars in their pursuit.

What threatens the herd is a threat also to Michigan's economy.

Michigan has been slow in applying standard farm practice to the control of its deer herd. No farmer who hopes to keep solvent will pasture more cattle in his fields than can find food there. But legislators, badgered by resort interests who believe with good reason that deer attract paying guests in summer and by softhearted citizens who hudder when the 'slaughter'" of does and fawns is mentioned, have been loath to approve measures designed to bring the herd in line with food supply.

Heavy starvation losses in recent seasons have forced the issue; legislators during the last regular session gave the conservation department limited authority to liberalize regulations to permit taking of "any deer" in a section of the state where the problem is most acute.

SCIENTIFIC APPROACH IN FACT FINDING

If it's good enough for big business it's good enough for the conservation department.

The scientific approach in finding, that is.

The department wants to know how many antlerless deer are killed in a special three-day season, November 28-30, and it wants the information in a hurry.

So it is turning to the University of Michigan's survey research center whose services have been used by the Detroit Edison Company only recently.

The research center, in turn, has assigned Dr. Benjamin Tepping, on leave from the Bureau of Census, Washington, D. C., to the job of getting the answers for the conservation department.

The center's method involves "sampling" of hunters who will be interviewed personally by department workers during the first week in December.

Tepping says that scientific selection of hunters to be interviewed plus carefully-worded questionaires will turn up advance data that will be proved amazingly accurate when all returns are in.

With legislation blessings, the department is opening counties in the north half of the lower pensula to the taking of any deer in the last three days of this month's regular gun season as a means of reducing a deer herd that has outrun it natural food supply.

The university's research center engages in fact finding for both business and government.

The Servicemens' LETTER

Hi Fellas:

The bucks aren't coming into town so fast now. After the first two days the number killed fell off sharply as usual. The weather has been foul, putrid, etc. No decent self-respecting deer would abroad in such stuff anyway. It's only such things as deer hunters that are foolish enough to get out in such stuff.

The last I heard from Don Trojanek, he was still cooling his heels in Camp Kilmer waiting for shipment. That's a rather dismal place to wait around in, too.

Don Neumann is home on leave this week. He has acquired quite a southern drawl from being around the sailors in Baltimore—quite a sea dog I'd say. Don is due back on board the Apolachie on December 3rd.

I have a note here which informs us that Dave Vallance is on the move from Texas up to Kansas. Does someone have his new address?

Jim Raymond has also left San-Antonio. His new address is A|B James E. Raymond, AF 16 425 729, 815th A. B. Gp, Forbes AFB, Topeka, Kansas. Can it be that he and Dave went up there together?

Here's a letter from Dale Lavanway informing us that: "Hello. Well I have a new address again. It seems that the Army likes to move me around. This is the fifth army base I have been on in the past 8 months. My address is: Pvt. Dale Lavanway, RA 16 404 493, Co. B, 8617 AAW, A. H. S., Arlington, Virginia. This post is located near the Pentagon Building in Washington, D. C. We are just across the Potomac River. I do not know how long I will be here.

'The barracks are nice here compared to other posts. We have cement block buildings, divided into sections with about 4 to 6 men in a section.

'I got a letter from Norman Beal who is over in Korea. He says he is working in a motor pool now."

Thanks for the letter, Dale. Being around Washington can be pretty sweet—but isn't there an awful lot of brass there too?

Ed Drapeau has ben moved up to Sacramento, Calif. His new address is: A|3C Jean E. Drapeau, 3537 Maint Sq, Box 456, Mather AFB, Sacramento, Calif. That's the same base where Lawrence Elsworth is located. You can find him in the 3535 Maint Sqd, Ed. Ed is supposed to stay at Mather for about one month and then only the Air Force knows where.

Berton Bunker has a new battalion address at same camp. It is: Pvt Berton E. Bunker, Btry A, 4th AAA Tng Bn, Fort Bliss, Texas.

Here's a new man in the Coast Guard. James Arnott has just signed up with them and his address is as follows: James Arnott (308-366) SR, Company E-16, Barracks 2, U. S. C. G. Rec Center, Cape May, New Jersey. Good Luck, Jim.

Lyle Peck appeared over the horizon this past week. He looks as though they had given him a rather rough time down in Fort Leonard Wood. PeeWee never did have too much meat on his bones but they sure took some off. He complains that they didn't feed him very well. Says they gave him C-Rations about three days out of every month. And not enough of them even. Lyle has graduated from the Army Engineer training course and is home on a short leave prior to reporting in Seattle, Washington, on Dec. 1st. He's hoping that if he does go directly overseas that he goes past Jim McLaughlin in Japan. He says he sure will collect on that offer of Jim's.

Raymond Romback has new overseas address. It is Pvt Raymond R. Romback, US 55 248 362, Hq Co, 31st Inf Regt, APO 7, c|o P M, San Francisco, Calif. That APO 7 would indicate that Ray is in the 7th Division along with Glen Young who is in the 707th Ord M. Co. You two men probably do not know each other but you better drop in and say hello if your outfits are nearby.

Here's Howard Evans overseas address. Howard is on his way to Austria, you remember. M|Sgt Howard O. Evans, RA 16 263 485, Prov Co 3016, APO 168, c|o PM, New York, N. Y.

The Morris twins are still studying hard in Fort Devens, Massachusetts. Here's a letter from Darwin. "Guess I better get on the ball and write you a few lines. We are both fine and busy. Going to school every day but Sunday. We have a few weeks left. Be both like it real well.

'We sure enjoy getting the E. J. paper and also like the way those fellows have played football this fall. We sure want to thank those who make it possible for us to receive this paper.

'Michigan and State have been doing OK in the line of football, too. Maryland getting beat by Mississippi yesterday was quite an upset.

'I suppose a lot of fellows were lucky enough to get a buck. I guess from all reports the deer hunting should be pretty good. I have bought me a shotgun and have been doing a little hunting here. I got a duck yesterday afternoon. We can't hunt on Sundays here in Massashusetts. I want to hunt deer. The season is 1st to 6th of December. We can hunt here on Post with a post permit which doesn't cost us anything.

'We have had a nice fall here only awful dry. We had our first snow last Sunday but it went off Monday.

'We have a little cange in address—there isn't much to it now. Pvts Darwin and Delwin Morris, Co B, T. A. S. A. S. R., 8622 AAU, Fort Devens, Mass."

Thanks for the letter, Darwin. Good luck in your hunting.

Last but not least is this letter from Hershel Young over in Port Lyenty.

"Bet everyone at home is getting ready for Christmas. We are over here, too. But it won't seem like Christmas over here with lots of rain and more rain. But we are going to have the finest tree we can find. Bet it will look like the scrubbist cedar in Michigan.

'Clare Loomis from MCB 8 will be out with us for Thanksgiving. Sure hope we can get an American turkey.

'Well, Jake, we have a canasta date up the road aways so I had better knock off. I will really get busy and write a good letter some day and give you more news."

I note that Hersh's letter had a small change of address in the return portion. It is: H. C. Young, CM-1, U. S. N. A. F., c|o FPO, New York, N. Y., Navy 214, Box A.

I'll take care of your request promptly, Hersh. I'll keep a record of the details here until I hear from you again. Give my regards to your family and to Clare.

That's all for tonight, men.

IMPROPER BRINE DISPOSAL PRACTICES BY OIL PRODUCER JOS. FITDIETT

Joseph Fitchett, Bloomingdale oil producer, will be tried in circuit court of Ingham county December 1st on a charge of improper brine disposal practices, the conservation department reports.

Gerald E. Eddy, Michigan's supervisor of wells and head of the conservation department, brought the suit against Fitchett for practices used in producing oil from a well near Grand Rapids.

Often, subterranean brines are raised to the earth's surface during oil production process; disposal of these without causing pollution is a necessary part of oil work.

Though now controlled by statute, improper brine practices during the early days of Michigan's oil, gypsum and salt industries harmed ground water in some portions of the state.

Some city water systems had to be revamped because of this pollution; Grand Rapids now imports most of its water from Lake Michigan. Bay City, Saginaw and Flint are other cities forced to find water elsewhere because of polluted ground waters.

House Pets Can Cause Asthma

Your dog's whiskers or your cat's "meow" may be making you an asthma victim.

Dr. Robert G. Lovell, a Uinversity of Michigan allergist, says that dogs, birds and cats may give off tiny particles from their fur, feathers or skin to cause severe respiratory symptons in allergic persons.

Short haired or "non-shedding" animals can't be ruled out either, he cautions. That's because it's often the saliva of the pet which dries and blows in tiny particles through the air like pollen to bring on asthma.

Thus, a cat's friendly "meow" can actually be an asthma victim's enemy.

Animal dander also carries trouble for the asthmatic as it floats in the air, either from a pet or a rug pad made of hog or cattle hair.

Medical treatment of such asthma patients usually requires giving the animal pad away to eliminate the allergy, Dr. Lovell says.

TURKEY TIME

But before that delectable bird holds forth at the head of your Thanksgiving table you may want to do some thinking about buying him. Dr. Pauline Paul of the foods and nutrition department, Michigan State College, recommends investigation into the various ways turkey can be purchased these days.

First of all, Dr. Paul says, suit your turkey purchase to the size of your family. A small family can have a traditional Thanksgiving dinner now without eating turkey for two weeks afterwards, by buying small whole turkey, turkey halves or turkey pieces.

Turkey broilers may be the answer to your problem. They weigh from four to five pounds dressed and may be split and broiled or stuffed and roasted in the usual manner.

Or, look for turkey pieces. A whole breast will serve two to four persons or a thigh and drumsticks will take care of two, Dr. Paul advises. This buying by the piece is also good if the family has particular preference about light and dark meat. Dr. Paul says that turkey pieces may be fried, broiled, roasted or made into fricassee. If you roast or broil the pieces brush them with fat occasionally during the cooking to keep the pieces from drying out.

In some markets half turkeys are available. In this case the carcass has been sawed in half along the back bone. Stuff the body cavity as you would a whole bird and hold in the stuffing with a covering of waxed paper or aluminum foil. Place the half turkey on a rack, stuffing side down, to roast, Dr. Paul recommends.

Avoid a turkey hangover at your house this Thanksgiving time. Don't bring in the turkey meal after meal in its orginal roasted form—try some interesting variations on the tradttional theme.

Dr. Pauline Paul of the Michigan State College foods and nutrition department offers three ways to use left-over turkey. She suggests freezing it for later use, making a turkey loaf or heating the turkey slices and covering with an interesting sauce.

To freeze turkey Dr. Paul urges you to bone the bird and have the meat ready to serve when you remove it from the freezer.

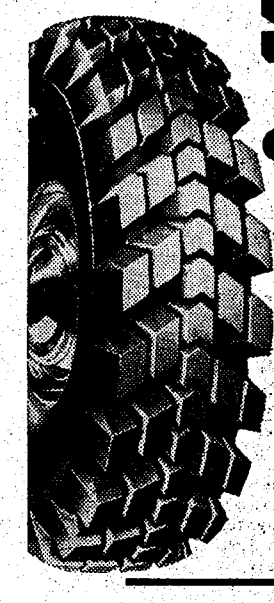

Turkey loaf will make a "company dinner". Chopped turkey, cooked noodles or spaghetti, chopped stuffed olives, chopped celery, a little grated onion, salt and pepper mixed together and moistened with turkey gravy or white sauce will do it. Turn the mixture into a loaf pan and bake with a layer of buttered crumbs on top.

Turkey slices can be heated on top of the stove in a double boiler, or do them in the oven, but take care to avoid drying out the slices, Dr. Paul stressses. Slices placed in the oven may be covered loosely or kept moist with a sauce. Left-over turkey gravy or stock or a little milk would give variety to warmed turkey slices the day after Thanksgiving. For devilied turkey, cover slices with a highly seasoned tomato sauce. Or Dr. Paul suggests a sweet-sour sauce or a barbecue sauce.
